Tip
Remember that questions 11-20 are in the order of this text.

Music for Life

Learning music is important for the educational and personal development of young people. Learning music is also great fun!

Learning an instrument: how do pupils choose?
All our teachers are highly qualified and experienced musicians, and pupils can learn to play a wide range of instruments, from the keyboard to the drums. We have open days when new pupils who are unsure which instrument to choose can come to the centre. They are able to speak to teachers about which instrument might be best for them, and they can also see and hear classes in action.

How are pupils taught?
Pupils can learn in small groups, in classes or individually, depending on their needs. Small groups of three or four pupils have lessons that last for a minimum of thirty minutes. Class lessons last for a minimum of forty-five minutes and have at least ten pupils. Individual lessons are offered only to pupils who have some experience.

When and where do lessons take place?
Lessons are available in many schools, usually during the day. If there is no lesson available for a particular instrument in a particular school, other arrangements can be made at one of our music centres for lessons on Saturday afternoons or weekday evenings.

Who is responsible for buying the instruments?
Parents usually have to provide instruments and music. But parents of beginners are advised not to buy an instrument until they are told that a piece is available. They should also find out from the teacher the most suitable type of instrument to get.

Singing lessons: what are the benefits?
The Centre also offers singing lessons. Singing can encourage young people to develop different abilities. It can help with communication, and for those who go to drama school, singing provides good training for acting too. Pupils can come for an hour every week to sing and just enjoy themselves, or they can choose to take exams and sing at concerts.

Starting young: when can pupils begin?
Children are never too young to become interested in music. We have special Musical Youth classes for children from the age of 3/4 to 8. These are designed to encourage young children to enjoy music through a variety of activities including singing, musical games, listening and movement. Musical Youth classes take place on Saturday mornings with groups of about 18 children. A parent or other adult must attend each session, and they are encouraged to sit with their child and help them with the activities.
