SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Employers are more and more interested in taking on students during their holiday periods. Students can do the easier tasks and free up time for their permanent employers to do the more demanding ones. Although the jobs are often low-paid, it is a great chance to explore their interests and add to their CVs. However, few students know what jobs may be available.

Colleges sometimes advertise summer jobs on their notice-boards and in newspapers, and there are also well-known international organizations which can help. Students can also search the web, find an interesting company and email the manager to ask what temporary jobs exist. This may sound time-consuming, but students then get to work in the company of their choice, so it is what I recommend.

As a science student, two years ago I spent ten weeks in a laboratory in California, helping a group of researchers with their work. To begin with, the job seemed uninteresting because my responsibilities were not clear, but when I started working on a range of projects, such as writing research papers and creating web pages, my attitude changed.

I was paid enough to cover all my daily needs, so I had no financial worries. One of my jobs was to prepare slides to train all the schoolkids. This was an entirely new challenge which I enjoyed so much I decided to train as a teacher rather than a researcher when I got back. My only regret was that I'd been too busy to learn more about the USA, but then a good summer job seldom leaves you much free time and you should be prepared for that.

21 What is the writer's main purpose in writing the text?

- A to warn students about low-paid summer jobs
- B to describe the best summer jobs for students
- C to encourage students to look for summer jobs
- D to offer students interesting summer jobs

22 The writer says the best way to find a good summer job is

- A to ask their own colleges for help.
- B to read the job advertisements in the press.
- C to join an organized student programme.
- D to contact possible employers directly.

23 The writer found the California job disappointing at first because

- A he was not sure what he had to do.
- B he had to work on too many projects.
- C he did not like research work.
- D he lacked good computer skills.

24 In what way did the California job benefit the writer?

- A It allowed him to save some money.
- B It gave him contacts he could use later.
- C It made him change his career plans.
- D It taught him what life was like in the USA.

25 Which of these could be the writer speaking?

- A A summer job is a good way of getting to see the world.
- B Students are often unaware of summer job opportunities.
- C Employers are unwilling to offer summer jobs to students.
- D Students should be better paid for doing summer jobs.
